Meeting the challenges of Agriculture and Forestry with Commissioner Bob Odom

Based on early reports from producers, snow and ice in northern parishes and below freezing temperatures in southern parishes have done little damage to agriculture operations in Louisiana.

According to Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Bob Odom, the highest concentration of damage occurred in the forest industry when timber stands were pounded by an ice storm just before Christmas.

Citrus fruit and trees, peach trees, strawberry bushes and poultry operations are also being closely monitored right now because of their fragility during extremely cold temperatures.

“Our forest landowners are going to come out of this winter with substantial damage to their timber, but what’s important right now is for them to be looking into what they can salvage. By salvaging some of the trees they will get a return on a portion of their investment,” Odom said.

“At my family farm in Claiborne Parish, tree tops were snapped in two and limbs were knocked down by the ice storm,” Odom noted, referring to about 70 acres of trees he has planted at his farm in rural north Louisiana.

“I ended up hiring a salvage company to come in and retrieve the timber that was salvageable. Once you get that kind of damage you have no other choice than to salvage what can be salvaged and replant what needs to be replanted.”

Odom has talked to foresters in the area who say the Christmas Day icy weather and New Year’s Eve snow have done less damage to trees than the pre-holiday ice storm.

Other crops have felt few ill effects from the freezing temperatures and precipitation.

County agents with the LSU AgCenter are staying busy contacting producers to check the current status of their crops. At this point, poultry producers are reporting no damage to poultry houses and no loss of birds. Minor inconveniences did occur during power outages as producers worked to keep waterlines thawed out.

In Lincoln Parish, peach farmers say damage will be “very little.” County agent Ron Adams said pruning peach trees in early fall kept limbs from breaking under the weight of ice and snow.

Southern parishes were spared from the accumulation of ice and snow, but temperatures in the twenties overnight during the last week have kept producers on their toes.

Strawberry farmers in Hammond are using freeze protection systems to keep bushes at a constant 32-degree temperature. Producers say it is too early to tell if there is damage to the bushes. Sandra Benjamin, county agent, said once temperatures warm up, producers will remove the special fabric and ice used to insulate the bushes and assess any damage.

Citrus producers are reporting minimal to no damage to fruit or trees. In fruit cut open Tuesday by citrus researchers in Plaquemines Parish, there was no sign of ice or damage from the cold temperatures. Reports indicate that approximately 30 percent of the citrus crop is still on trees awaiting harvest.

Wayne Bourgeois, a citrus researcher for the AgCenter, said cool temperatures starting back in November helped the citrus trees develop a “tolerance” for the recent freezing temperatures.

“If you have consistently cool weather over a long period of time the tree will not develop a resistance, but it will condition itself to the weather and become able to tolerate lower temperatures,” he explained.

Odom pointed out that although there is little damage at this time, if below-freezing temperatures continue over an extended period of time reports of damage and loss of plants could begin to mount.

Agricultural and Forestry Trade and Investment Mission to Russia Announced

Louisiana agricultural, forestry and agribusinesses wanting to explore trade and investment opportunities in Russia should mark their 2001 calendars. A spring mission, with ample networking opportunities, is accepting applications now.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) will sponsor the investment and trade mission to Russia during April 20-30, 2001. The Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry is assisting the USDA in recruiting Louisiana individuals, companies or other commercial agribusiness entities for the mission.

The trip has only 10 openings nationwide, and the deadline to apply is March 15, 2001. Medium sized businesses are encouraged to apply, but all business are welcome. The program is open to food producers, processors, and marketers in a variety of sectors. The mission will targeting the Lipetsk, Rostov, and Samara regions.

Participants will be provided with interpreters and other logistical support. They will have a chance to meet with pre-screened strategic or financial partners in the host country. There will be briefings from the U. S. embassy and trade officials, and opportunities to meet with local government and banking officials. Hotel accommodations outside Moscow will be provided, as well as travel in country and some meals.

Participants must pay their own international travel and hotel costs in Moscow. Coordinators in the Foreign Agricultural Service’s office on International Cooperation and Development encourage interested executives to apply early and make preparations soon. A passport and visa will also be required for this trip, so time is of the essence.

Russia’s economy has improved significantly in 2000. Business-friendly tax reforms and rising investment from Europe are further indicators of opportunities for investment.

Russia is a market of 150 million consumers. U.S. agricultural, fish and forestry product exports to Russia in 1999 totaled $743 million. Sales during the first eight months of 2000 were $585 million, a 49% increase over the same period in 1999.

Interested Louisiana interests should contact Roy L. Johnson, Director of Market Development, Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry at phone number (225) 922-1280, or e-mail roy_j@ldaf.state.la.us or fax (225) 922-1289
